A roofing quote is only as good as the price you actually end up paying. Most people in Cardiff have heard a story about a job that started cheap and finished roof tiling Cardiff expensive, with extras appearing once the old tiles came off. Redland Roofing Cardiff, a family-owned business in Rumney with over 30 years in the roofing trade, works on a simple principle: no games and no hidden costs. Here's how to compare quotes from roofers in Cardiff so you know what you're really being offered. Start by making sure every quote covers the same work. One roofer might price a full strip back to the rafters with a new breathable membrane and treated battens, whilst another prices only for swapping a few damaged tiles and patching the felt. The second figure will almost always be lower, but it isn't the same job. Check whether the price includes new fascias and gutters, lead flashings, ridge tiles and taking away the waste. Ask what happens if rotten timber turns up once work begins. A cheap quote that leaves these questions open can grow very quickly. When one customer had a full re-roof with Redland Roofing Cardiff, the work covered scaffolding, stripping back to the rafters, a new breathable membrane, treated battens, reusing the sound tiles and replacing damaged ones, plus new fascias and gutters. That's the level of detail to look for on paper. Honest assessment matters as much as price. On the Victorian terraces of Roath and Grangetown, a slate roof with a handful of slipped slates may only need repairs, not a new roof. In Heath or Llanishen, a concrete tile roof might have plenty of life left once loose ridge tiles are refixed. A roofer who tells you that is putting your interests first. Customers on Google describe John explaining problems clearly and answering questions patiently, and one customer who gathered quotes from eight to ten roofers chose Redland Roofing Cardiff in the end. Competitive quotes are one of the recurring themes in the firm's reviews.
